THE FATE OF TWO OLD HEROES.

Sold for $23 After Years of Most Gallant Service.

The two war veterans stood with shaking limbs on the rough pavement at the navy yard in Boston last week. About them a score or more of Government employes had assembled. They were peculiar specimens, but their aged and feeble bodies were positive evidence that they had served their country long and well. They had faced the powder innumerable times during the great struggle between the North and South; they had seen patriots fall and time again before the deadly fire of the enemy's charge; they had heard the martial music as it broke forth to sound the triumphant march of a departed hero; they had assisted in forwarding and transporting the ammunition which carried the day, and they had been companions of the late General Grant when a single ray of hope failed to lighten the frightful darkness of the Wilderness.

And all for what? The country which they helped to preserve from the plundering hand of the rebel was ungrateful. They had served it in good faith for days and years, but could do so no longer. It has no use for idlers, and as age stifled their ambition for work they had to be disposed of; so said the mandate. They were common slaves, and were to be treated as such. The ring of the auctioneer's hammer was to settle their future. Uncle Sam had ordered their sale. The score of Government officials uttered no protest against the inhuman act, and the unsympathetic auctioneer hesitated not at cutting off their honorable career. The bidding was as niggardly as the lamentation, and a few minutes told the tale—the two great relics of the war controlled the great sums of $13 and $10. They were not purchased by a distinguished personage with enthusiastic belief, but were seized by one who will henceforth compel them to drag a dump cart at Charlestown from early morning to the close of day. And all for being faithful! There was no Henry Bergh there to stop the ungodly sight, and, as a result, the huge coffers of this great, free country were swelled by an additional $23 in recognition of the sale of two feeble horses which had carried the blue to victory.—N.Y. Times.

Resemblance.

Lieut. George Monroe had a day off and went to Nantasket. On the boat, with several friends, there was a talk about personal resemblances.

"Wohl! I have been taken for Bismarck, in Berlin," said a German gentleman.

"Aussi, of a time in Paris, I was, as the Count de Paris saluted, so like him I resembled," said a teacher of French.

"That's nothing," said George: "a fellow came up and slapped me on the back, right on Tromont street the other day, and cried out, 'Great Caesar is that you?'—Boston News.
